For Mike White of Camden, this year's New England Forest Rally marks both his return to the sport he loves and to his home event, thanks to the help of several Maine businesses.

After a seven-year absence from stage rally — where modified street cars race flat-out against the clock on closed forest roads — White and his RallyHo Motorsports crew, based out of Camden, are making final preparations of the team's newly-built Saab 900 rally car.

White will challenge the roads of northwestern Maine and northern New Hampshire on July 16-17 with co-driver Jared Lantzy of Silver Spring, Md. beside him calling route instructions.

The New England Forest Rally is the final round of the Rally America national series and the eastern round of the Max Attack! two-wheel drive rally series.

A dedicated group of Maine owned businesses have contributed to RallyHo's efforts to return to rallying. White hopes that by using rally to help drive interest in Maine businesses, he can help the sport and his sponsors grow.
